- Jeff: – Hello, Anna. Are you going to Mark's house tomorrow evening?
- Anna: – I must may go, but I'm not sure yet.
- Jeff: – Does that mean that you're not planning to go?
- Anna: – I didn't say that. I said that I might should not go. I am still in doubt.
- Jeff: – What's the matter?
- Anna: – Well, I can might only go if I find someone to take care of my baby.
- Jeff: – I really think that you should will try to attend. We all have an obligation to visit him. After all, he is our best friend, and he must ought to be expecting everyone to be there. His brain surgery is in three days. Our visit may has to be vital.
- Anna: – I know that, but I'm having trouble finding a babysitter. What would must you do in my place?
- Jeff: – If I were you, I would must try to hire someone.
- Anna: – I never thought of doing that. Perhaps I could will convince my husband to call an agency.
- Jeff: – Oh, you really should might try. In fact, you must can be there. It will must not have the same effect without you.
- Anna: – Thanks, Jeff. You've made me realize that I must may come.
